1. OVERVIEW

"When we express a preference for French holidays, German cars, Italian opera, when we instinctively trust the policies of the Swedish government, comment on the ambition of the Japanese, the bluntness of the Americans or the courtesy of the British, when we avoid investing in Russia, admire the heritage of the Chinese, or talk about the warmth of the South Africans, we are responding to brand images in exactly the same way as when we are shopping for clothing or food.

Nation branding is an important concept in today's world. Globalisation means that countries compete with each other for the attention, respect and trust of investors, tourists, consumers, donors, immigrants, the media and the governments of other nations; so a powerful and positive nation brand provides a crucial competitive advantage. It is essential for countries to understand how they are seen by publics around the world; how their achievements and failures their assets and their liabilities their people and their products are reflected in their brand image." Simon Anholt

Four years ago when the International Marketing Council (IMC) started, no country was really actively doing nation branding – there were a few minor initiatives around the world, mostly focusing on tourism branding. Today, that scenario has dramatically changed. Nation branding is the buzzword, books are being written, journals produced and conferences held. There is a growing realization that the global market is a competitive place to be and the war zone is the mind of potential consumers.

It is our belief that this focus has been created by the emergence of China as a force in the global arena, followed closely by India. Relative to these two instances, few nations can compete in terms of efficiencies of scale or size of market, or opportunities or budgets.

In South Africa, therefore, we need to think smart, focus our efforts, design the best possible use and integration of relatively limited resources, and most of all create clear and consistent messaging that emphasises distinction and attractiveness in relation to the obvious appeal of the global giants.

During the fiscal year ahead, the IMC's work will of necessity be guided substantially by the Accelerated and Shared Growth Initiative of South Africa (Asgisa), whose identification of constraints on economic development and associated interventions provide a new point of departure in the country's economic development.

From the IMC's perspective, Asgisa's focus on investment in skills and infrastructure; improved social services; support to small business, and the promotion of key industrial sectors represent powerful opportunities to mobilise South Africans around a competitiveness mindset, and to expand international investor interest in the country.

The planned international procurement of about 40% of goods and services related to Government's R372billion investment in infrastructure implies significant international interest and partnership, as does the Department of Home Affairs' provision for the importation of critical national skills.

Asgisa clearly responds to and corresponds with the International Investment Council's belief that South Africa should be bolder and more confident in setting growth targets and in marketing its economic successes.

Asgisa places the economy at the centre of current awareness about South Africa and will require the IMC to adapt its communication to reflect the pre-eminence of economic growth in the 'master narrative' on the country.

As a product of consensus among Government, business, labour and civil society formations, Asgisa's implementation and communication of its success will depend on integrated, mutually reinforcing communication among the various partners.

This expectation is clearly couched in Government's theme for the year: "Age of Hope: A National Effort for Faster and Shared Growth".

Joint action and communication by social partners will naturally support the IMC's mission to ensure that perceptions about the country are shifted or maintained on the basis of coherent action and communication.

Domestic

We have all felt the mood swing in the country, this is now being supported with research acknowledging the positive messages that the IMC creates, but also being reflected in the changing attitudes here at home. Our marketing will intensify and build on the work of 2005. On radio we will tell the stories of ordinary people doing extraordinary things, but we now feel there is a need for a "call to action" – we have to have 2010 FIFA World Cup firmly on the radar screen – by that time, we must present a unified nation to the world, a nation striving for success, a nation that has overcome its major challenges, a nation with a competitive mindset.

In this context, the enabling environment created by Asgisa for especially small enterprises as well as individuals in the Second Economy should generate case studies of effective partnership or individual endeavour that could in turn inform the IMC's creative communication.

The IMC cannot do this alone – thus the engagement of stakeholders has to be first priority. Stakeholder relations will grow more substantially into its role of engagement with our key stakeholders – that means spending more time with the Department of Foreign Affairs, with Trade and Investment South Africa and South African Tourism, really ensuring synergy, ensuring that the brand values are infiltrated into all communication, making sure that we leverage on each other's events, missions and visitors. We need to further engage the business organisations like Business Unity South Africa, Business Leadership South Africa, South African Chamber of Business, etc. and key corporates who are willing to support the message.

The internal focus will be...

"What do we need to do domestically to support our global objectives?"

What will make South Africans support our efforts? What will turn them into active marketers and promoters of their country? How can we mobilise them, get them to think and act positively?

How do we build that a competitive mindset?

International

The thrust of the international work will be to intensify current efforts. Our task is to build awareness and receptiveness to the brand to enable stakeholders to deliver their objectives more easily. (To date, we do not believe that we have maximized the synergies with key stakeholders although substantial strides have been made.) We believe that we have made the correct media choices – now we need to increase our exposure there, and to actively look for leveraging opportunities, whether these be PR or events, or mobilising of thought leaders into print, TV and radio.

To really make the international work deliver on our objectives, we have to be clear about WHO makes the decision about business expansion, and also who supports that decision. We need to reach these people. So, the media message needs to be targeted and the one on one interfaces need to reinforce the work done in mass media. The advertising should make it easier for the country managers to gain access, and to persuade.

Clearly the engagement with the Department of Foreign Affairs is crucial in this delivery.

The country manager formula is bearing fruit. The master narrative, particularly in the UK is changing and focusing on the buoyant state of the economy. The key messages are being articulated clearly and increasingly consistently. However the country managers are finding the need for some support to enable them to work more efficiently. We propose allocating some of the additional funding that we received in this area.

This year we will expand into India, where the focus will be slightly different to the role we play in Washington and London. South Africa is not moving into a hostile environment – we have many friends in India, but the investment potential and particularly the tourism potential has not even begun to be tapped.

One of our key focus areas for 2006 is the FIFA Soccer World Cup which will be held in Germany. As the whistle blows mid July, the worlds sporting media will be looking to South Africa and its state of readiness.

Another major project for 2006 will be to harness the Diaspora, and encourage them to participate in helping us to achieve our objectives. There are a few prongs to this strategy – we will have to identify the key people, and then identify the key task – the overall objectives is to get thought leaders encouraging investment into South Africa, putting South Africa on the radar screen by keeping these carefully selected people informed about current events and current messaging. In essence this is an international thrust of the Brand Champion programme.

2. KEY FOCUS FOR FISCAL YEAR 2006

Our key priorities in 2006 and beyond are as follows: -

- A. Build on work done in the previous fiscal, and intensify all exposure in the media chosen to date, with particular attention being paid to how to leverage economically off committed spend.
- B. Heighten awareness of South Africa's business features and offerings on the global front in support of Asgisa 6% growth target.
 - Leverage the FIFA Soccer World Cup finals in Germany 2006.
 - Reinforce advertising reach with public relations
 - Expand country manager presence to India

On the domestic front, our priorities are:

- C. Mobilize other stakeholders who will help heighten South Africa's business visibility, brand visibility and share of voice.
- D. To continue to reinforce patriotism, pride and optimism amongst the general public via mass-media communication, using fewer resources. It is important to maintain a national pride building presence at home. Specifically, the plan is to generate free exposure via co-operative advertising programmes and leverage activities so we can free up resources for the global market. To begin to leverage on the FIFA 2010 Soccer World Cup opportunities

In terms of measurement our priorities are as follows: -

- E. Internationally we plan to progress through a global brand equity tracking study. This will track how well South Africa fares relative to our competitive set on each one of the key brand attributes.
- F. Domestically, we plan to conduct a national perceptions' audit at least once a year. This will give us an indication regarding levels of pride, optimism and patriotism amongst the general public. In addition, we also plan to continue doing stakeholder perceptions audits to gauge what our stakeholders think about the work we do.
